Chapter 1: Departing from Home

Saying goodbye to family and friends

Saying goodbye to loved ones is never easy, but it's especially difficult when you're embarking on a long and potentially dangerous journey. In those moments, it's important to remember the reasons why you're going and to focus on the excitement of the adventure that lies ahead.

For me, the hardest goodbye was to my young children. They were too young to understand why I had to leave, and their tears broke my heart. But I knew that I had to go, and that I would be back as soon as I could.

I also said goodbye to my parents, my siblings, and my friends. They were all supportive of my decision, but they were also worried about me. I promised them that I would take care of myself, and that I would call them as often as I could.

Saying goodbye is never easy, but it's important to remember that it's not goodbye forever. It's just goodbye for now. And when you finally return home, you'll be greeted with open arms and a heart full of love.

The day finally came when I had to leave. I hugged my children tightly and promised them that I would be back soon. I kissed my parents and siblings goodbye, and then I turned and walked away.

As I walked away, I could feel the tears streaming down my face. But I didn't look back. I knew that if I did, I would never be able to leave.

I walked until I reached the edge of the village, and then I turned and looked back one last time. My family and friends were all standing there, waving goodbye. I waved back, and then I turned and continued on my journey.

I knew that the journey ahead would be long and difficult, but I was also filled with excitement. I was finally on my way to the Libyan Desert, and I couldn't wait to see what adventures awaited me.

Chapter 1: Departing from Home

Preparing for the long journey ahead

Preparing for a long journey, especially to a foreign land with unfamiliar customs and environments, requires careful planning and preparation. In the case of our Libyan adventure, the task seemed daunting at first. Libya, a vast and enigmatic country in North Africa, was a place we had only read about in books and seen in documentaries.

The first step was to obtain the necessary visas and travel documents. We also needed to ensure our passports were up to date and valid for international travel. Vaccinations and health precautions were also high on our priority list. We consulted with our doctor and followed their recommendations for immunizations and medications to protect ourselves against potential health risks.

Packing for the journey was another challenge. We had to consider the extreme temperature variations we would likely encounter, from the scorching heat of the desert to the chilly nights. We packed a combination of lightweight, breathable clothing and warmer layers for the evenings. Sturdy footwear was essential for exploring the rugged terrain, and we also included a small first-aid kit and essential toiletries.

We knew that communication would be vital, so we arranged for international roaming on our mobile phones. We also purchased a local SIM card to ensure we could stay connected while in Libya. Additionally, we downloaded offline maps and translation apps to help us navigate and communicate with the locals.

As the departure date approached, we finalized our itinerary and made arrangements for transportation within Libya. We booked flights from our home country to Tripoli and planned our onward journey by bus or train. We also researched reputable tour operators who could provide guided excursions to some of the country's most iconic landmarks.

The excitement and anticipation were palpable as we gathered our belongings and bid farewell to family and friends. We were embarking on an adventure that promised to broaden our horizons and create memories that would last a lifetime.

Chapter 1: Departing from Home

Anticipating the adventure to come

The day of departure is a mix of emotions. There is excitement for the adventure that lies ahead, but also a sense of trepidation and uncertainty. Leaving behind the familiar and venturing into the unknown can be both exhilarating and daunting.

As I pack my bags and say goodbye to my family and friends, I can't help but wonder what the future holds. I have dreamed of this journey for so long, but now that it is finally here, I can't shake the feeling that anything can happen.

I try to focus on the positive, reminding myself of all the amazing things I will see and experience. I will explore ancient ruins, meet new people, and learn about different cultures. I will push myself to my limits and grow as a person.

But there is also a sense of unease that I can't ignore. What if I get sick? What if I get lost? What if I am not able to handle the challenges that lie ahead?

These doubts and fears are natural, I tell myself. Everyone feels them when they step outside of their comfort zone. The important thing is to not let them stop me from pursuing my dreams.

I take a deep breath and focus on the present moment. I am here, on the cusp of a great adventure. I am ready to embrace the unknown and see where it takes me.
